Find Right Weather For An Active Life.

If you've ever wondered why westerners are so breezy and active and optimistic, science has the answer. It's the weather, the atmosphere in which these people live.

Recent research has shown that growth and bodily development are greatly influenced by the atmosphere in which animals—and persons, too—live. For instance, pernicious moist heat leads to development of lean, stringy types of animals, with low heat production. Such animals stand chilling poorly. They are also easily infected.

The investigators found, however, that a few hours of cooling each day would overcome this condition and bring about definite changes in body functioning.

Prolonged periods of heat and the constant stimulation of repeated steam changes keep people in the northwest, for example, living on a high energy level and full of vitality and pep.

On the other hand, such stimulating conditions seem to produce a little earlier mental and physical breakdown than are met with in places where the climatic drive is less intense.

Investigations of relationship between weather and health have brought out some exceedingly interesting facts. Diabetes is less frequent and less troublesome in the south than in the north. This disease is especially associated with excessive drive.

That form of breakdown of the adrenal glands called Addison's disease also is seen far more frequently in northern areas, where the drive is intense, than in the south.

Of especial interest to many people are the figures relative to distribution of rheumatic disease. It is generally well known that people with this type of disease find their greatest relief during the hot summer weather and suffer most during the late winter and early spring months, when weather changes are most sudden.

A study of the human body shows that the pains in the joints also are associated with a lessening of the blood supply and that sudden changes in the circulation.

In general, chronic rheumatic conditions attack people in the latter half of life, which is particularly the time when all physical activities of the body tend to become more sluggish and inactive.

Under such circumstances, people need more protection against the rigors of our northern storm seasons, since their ability to adapt themselves to changes in the weather is greatly lessened.

However, when people make a change of climate and begin to feel better, they must not take it that the condition is cured. A return to the climatic conditions under which they formerly lived is likely to bring about a return of the symptoms.

Calls $470 Proper Income for Family—Survey Reports on America's Productive Capacity

It is quite possible that one of the things for which 1935 will be remembered is the fact that it was the year in which "The Chart of Plenty" was published.

Here is a book of extraordinary significance. Based on the findings of the National Survey of Potential Product Capacity, and written by Director Harold Loebe and his associates, it presents a clear and unmistakable picture of a land which is permitting itself to starve in the midst of plenty such as the world never in all its history knew before.

The survey undertook, first, to find out precisely what the productive capacity of the nation was in 1929, the peak year. Then it sought to find out what the needs of the citizens were. Finally, it compared its two sets of figures, to see just what we could have done for ourselves.

The result? A blunt assertion—but buttressed by innumerable figures—that our existing plant could easily supply every family in the nation with goods and services to the value of $470 a year.

The depression, say these students, is not merely unnecessary; it is a waste without precedent in history.

We have the physical capacity to abolish poverty, literally. We need only gear production to needs rather than to purchasing power.

The suggested remedy—an entirely new method of establishing and distributing money—is too complicated for discussion here. Read the book, and even if you reject the remedy, reflect on the picture it gives—a dazzling new era waiting for us to exploit it.

Published by Viking, the book sells for $2.50.

Orphaned Baby Is Custody Problem—Decision Should Be Father's.

My mail brings a strange request from a young woman—the aunt of a baby whose mother died in childbirth.

She asks me to suggest who should have the baby.

The father's family and the dead mother's are nearly equally financially and socially. The cities in which they live appear to constitute the only difference, the families consisting of childless aunts and grandmothers.

The father travels. He could see his child every two weeks if the baby were with his parents and sisters. He could see his son but seldom if he is kept by the mother's family. He is willing to have it either way, says my correspondent, as he mourns his lost young wife. Often a bereaved husband finds little comfort for a while, in the baby whose existence has cost so dearly.

Parental Privilege Will Develop I feel this knotty problem entirely beyond me. If this little chap will have equal advantages and love in either case, it seems like sacrifice for an outsider to say anything at all.

By this time the problem may have been solved. If not, I suggest that the entire decision be left with the father. If he is wise, he will recognize that each month his little son will grow more dear to him. A man will pride, too, in his offspring. He will grow curious about the progress of his baby. As the bitter edge wears off his sorrow he will find comfort and relief in the child who perhaps may resemble his lamented wife.

He may marry again in time, although the letter says he emphatically denies it now. Time brings healing and new interests. No one can tell what the future holds in store, even for hearts.

If he never again he will very likely want his child. Then it will be a hard adjustment to make for the little one. The boy will be a stranger to his daddy as well as his new mother if he never sees him in the meantime. For even two-weeks' visits will keep contact alive and his father will be his hero and his friend.

There seems to be no dispute between these two families, and that helps a great deal. The regulations would continue to be friendly and there could, perhaps, be some arrangement made for partial division of time.

However, if the father decides he would like his baby to stay where he is, with the maternal grandparents and aunts, that is all right too. It is his responsibility to take the initiative and declare himself one way or the other even though he is confused and unsure at the moment.

Whatever is done, I think, should be done soon, before the baby forms attachments and fixes his world too firmly. Later it will be harder for everybody, including those who have cared for him and have learned to love him as their own.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Brushing Brings Back Beauty.

"The skin on my face, arms and neck is smooth and clear, but my back is a sight," writes a young girl. "I can't wear backless evening gowns. Please tell me what causes this horrible condition and what I can do to remedy it."

Well, the fact that her face and arms are unblemished would indicate that there is nothing organically wrong with her and that her diet is sensible. Probably poor circulation and, to put the matter bluntly, improper methods of cleansing her back are largely responsible for the defects.

It may seem a little odd, but a good many women who are particularly careful about cleaning their faces and necks, stimulating circulation with a rough wash cloth or a complexion brush, persist in merely ringing instead of scrubbing their backs. Every one should have a long-handled bath brush and it should be used every day, whether you bathe in the tub or under the shower.

Get a bath brush with a curved handle which is easy to manipulate. One that can be removed from the handle picks more easily and is more utilitarian in the bathroom.

When you have finished brushing back and shoulders, rub carefully and if someone is available, get her to put a bit of your favorite overnight healing salve on the blemishes. Repeat every night until your back is as clear and pretty as the skin on your face. Then get a body oil or lotion and use it after each bath.

NEXT: A new complexion treatment.

SILKEN SPINDLES

by Laura Lou Brockman © 1935 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY
GAIL HENDERSON, pretty and 23, works in a silk mill. She and her 18-year-old brother, PHIL, support their invalid father.

STEVE MEYERS, who also works in the mill, asks Gail to marry him. She delays giving him an answer.

Gale goes skating, breaks through the ice and is rescued by BRIAN WESTMORE, whose father, now dead, built the mill. Brian has come home after two years in Paris, ready to take his place in the mill.

VICKY THATCHER, daughter of ROBERT THATCHER, general manager of the mill, schemes to entrap Brian. She goes into a wild and is furious. Convinced to meet Gale, she tells her that she (Vicky) and Brian are engaged to be married. Gale, believing Brian has been amusing himself at her expense, is deeply hurt. She refuses to see him again.

Phil loses his job. Brian, trying to forget Gale, turns to Vicky. Vicky and PHIL CONSIDER discuss the mill workers' attempt to organize. LEOTA BOLLER, believed to be a company spy, appears and they fear she has overheard.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XXXIX
JOE GILLASPIE faced the men and women crowded into the small room. His dark hair was tousled, unruly, and his eyes were shining.

"Fellow workers," he began in a hoarse voice, "you know what we're here for tonight. You know that the bosses are trying to break us in a new way. They've tried firing us. That wasn't enough. They found out they couldn't starve us, so now they're turning us into the streets."

A gruff voice interrupted. "We got rights the same as other people."

"Yes," Gillaspie answered, "we got rights, but what difference does that make? Do you think Thatcher cares anything about your rights? Work and go hungry, that's what he says, so he can live in a swell house with a lot of servants and ride around in a big automobile. Work and go hungry and live in the streets and the rest can pile up more dividends. Is that fair?"

"No!" Every voice in the room seemed to answer.

"Are you going to stand for it?"

"No!"

Gillaspie's voice rose louder. "You all know what happened to Mary Cassidy—a woman with two little children to support, thrown out of her job and then out of her home. Two more families got eviction notices today. They're going to put them out in the streets, too. And they'll put the rest of you out if they get the chance!"

"We ain't goin' to give them the chance!"

It was a girl with flaming red hair who spoke up. Others joined in. "You bet we ain't!" "No, we ain't goin' to give them the chance!" "You said it!" "We'll show 'em—!"

"All right," Joe Gillaspie's eyes flashed boldly. "I'm glad to know you feel that way, I thought you would. But you folks know, don't you, there's only one way to get what's comin' to us? We've got to fight for it!"

"That's the stuff, Joe!" The voice came from the rear of the room, high-pitched, emotional.

"You can lie down and take it, slave and take your cuts and be kicked out when the bosses are through with you, or you can stand up and fight. Which are you goin' to do?"

"We'll fight!" The chorus grew louder.

Gillaspie raised a hand for them to hush, went on: "If we're goin' to fight, the first thing we've got to do is get some more members. One of the rights the bosses forget belongs to us is the right to organize for collective bargaining. They don't admit we got the right to form an organization at all. Because they found out about it, four of us lost our jobs."

The girl with red hair was leaning forward. She cried out, "We're with you, Joe!" Somebody else added, "They can't scare us that way."

The speaker went on. "It's goin' to be hard work," he warned. "You all know the mill is full of stool pigeons. You've got to be awfully careful who you talk to."

A small man with a scar on one cheek said, "I got a report to make, Joe. It's about something that happened in the shipping room. Can I make it now?"

Gillaspie said, "Sure. Go ahead."

He moved back and the man with the scarred cheek got to his feet. He said, "Fellow workers—"

It was the following afternoon.

Gale tilted the umbrella against the wind and walked more rapidly. She didn't mind the rain; she rather liked it. It smelled fresh and clean and spring-like. Almost any other evening she would have enjoyed the walk to the drug store. It was a long walk—10 blocks in a neighborhood that was almost deserted. That was why Gale was hurrying. She wanted to get home before darkness settled down; the sky would darken early on account of the rain.

"If I'd only thought to tell Phil!" Gale scolded herself. Phil could have taken the prescription for her father's medicine to be refilled. But she had forgotten and the bottle of medicine was empty.

Mary Cassidy was cooking the Hendersons' evening meal, so that Gale was able to slip away on the errand. Mary was trying so hard to be helpful. And she had been helpful, too. In a house Mary knew exactly what to do and how to do it. Gale thought, "She ought to be working in a mill. She ought to be home, taking care of those children."

Well, Mary wasn't working in the mill now—

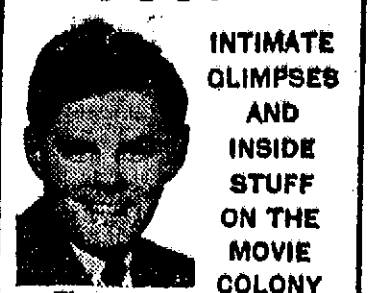

Mary's troubles, during the last few days, had made Gale think much less about her own. Mary wasn't much older than Gale, but she looked years older. Alone in the world except for two helpless children—without money, without work, without anything to look forward to except a struggle for the other to speak.

Gale thought, "This is ridiculous. I won't stay any longer. I'll make an excuse and get away—anywhere."

And yet she lingered. (To Be Continued)

HOLLYWOOD GOSSIP

—BY DAN THOMAS—

Name of Lon Chaney Returns to Screen

HOLLYWOOD—After three years of battling against taking such a step, a new Lon Chaney has come to the screen.

The newcomer wants it understood, however, that he has not the slightest expectation of taking the place of the Chaney who was so loved by millions of celluloid fans. In fact, stressing this point has become practically an obsession with him.

If anyone ever was to carry on in the type of roles made famous by the late Lon Chaney, however, no better successor could be found. You see, this new Lon Chaney in reality is Creighton Chaney, son of the late star.

Three years ago Creighton decided that he would like to carry the name of Chaney forward on the screen. Producers at the time tried to persuade him to adopt his father's name, but he refused, stating frankly that he did not consider himself worthy of the name.

Half a dozen contracts have been offered him if he would take his father's name, however. Beaten down at last, he finally has consented to do this. But, that there way be a distinction, he is calling himself Lon Chaney, Jr.

Consider His Family
"I finally gave in because I have a wife and two children to whom I owe a good living," Chaney explained to me.

"I tried for three years to make a go of things without capitalizing upon dad's name. But the curds have been stacked against me. If I had only myself to think of, I would battle it out to the end. But I'm getting older every year and I don't think it's right to make my family suffer just so I can fight for a principle."

"And it gives me the right to work in any of the major studios during my leisure time."

"This means that during the next three years I'll get plenty of experience. After that I would like to try my hand at the sort of roles dad used to do. I don't mean that I want to replace him, because I or nobody else ever could do that. Rather, I want to carry on as best I can for him."

"And I believe I could do the sort of roles he played so well. Because of the pain caused by those weird make-ups, tremendous physical strength is necessary. At least, I have that strength."

Also because of producers' never-ceasing cry for names . . . names, a new Lon Chaney has been born to the screen. At least, however, he is one actor who will try sincerely to justify his name, instead of making the name justify him.

Flowers
Wonderous truths, and manifold as wondrous,
God hath written in those stars above;
But not less in the bright flowerets
under us
Stands the revelation of his love.
Bright and glorious is that revelation,
Written all over this great world of ours;
Making evident our own creation,
In these stars of earth, these golden
flowers.
Everywhere about us they are glowing,
Some like stars to tell us spring is born;
Others, their blue eyes with tears
o'erflowing,
Stand like Ruth amid the golden corn.
In all places then, and in all seasons,
Flowers expand their light and soul-
like wings,
Teaching us, by most persuasive rensions,
How akin they are to human things.
And with child-like, credulous affection,
We behold their tender buds expand;
Emblems of our own great resurrection,
Emblems of the bright and better land.

Shirley Temple in New Saenger Film

"The Little Colonel" on Local Screen Beginning Sunday

An absorbing story, and the presence of the one and only Shirley Temple, make "The Little Colonel," which opens Sunday at the Saenger perfect screen entertainment.

Once again, America's golden-haired sweetheart captures, with her untaken art, her honest acting, the hearts of old and young.

So is co-starred with Lionel Barrymore in this heart-stirring superb story of a bitter Kentucky family feud during the days following the Civil War, when prejudices still rankled, and a woman who dared give her heart to a hated Yankee was ostracized by friends and relations. Shirley's charm shines in this story which is as tender as her baby hair. Not only is her work extraordinary as an actress, but she quite captivates the most blasé with her singing, quite surprises one with her dancing talents when she appears with Bill Robinson and accompanies him in his famous stair-dance.

As if this wealth of surprises were not enough, this picture ends in a blaze of Technicolor. For the first time in her meteoric career, Shirley Temple is presented in color. Barymore's presentation of the elaborate colonial is masterly. Commendable, also, is the fine work of the supporting cast composed of Evelyn Venable, John Lodge, Sidney Blackmer, and the already mentioned Bill Robinson.

"The Little Colonel," is heartily recommended to all picture lovers.

S. of the First Methodist church will meet Monday evening at 7:15 at the home of Mrs. C. S. Lowthorp on South Elm street, with Misses Mina Mae Milburn and Martha Shipp as hostesses. Miss Charlotte Crane will present the program.

Miss Martha Shipp is spending the week end with home folks in Little Rock.

The Thursday Night Bridge club held their second annual banquet Friday night in the new private dining room of the Cheekered Cafe. The St. Patrick's motif was observed in the decorations and favors, dancing was enjoyed throughout the evening. A tempting four course dinner was served to the following: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sommerville, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Coffee, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Mauldin, Miss Doris Glenn and Frank Drake, Miss Opal Garner and Guy Dwyne, Miss Mattie Evans and Cecil Houghton, Miss Katharine Porter and Houghton, Miss Margaret Powell and Otha Lewis, Miss Margaret Kinser and Wilson Hall.

to guess at or anticipate the verdict. Moreover, there are suspicious circumstances connected with the affair that cannot be recorded here, the investigation of which will be continued. The operator who actually sent the false flash has been dismissed.

Chief of Bureau Moberly, was wholly in the wrong in relying upon such a scheme. He had no authority to use it. He had no expert knowledge as to the equipment utilized. Were it not for his unusually fine service record over a period of years and his untiring devotion to duty through long and tedious hours at Fleming during the entire period of the trial his action which was instrumental in bringing about this deplorable situation would result in immediate dismissal. If he had authorized the sending of the false flash, which he did not, or if he had knowledge that it was going to be sent before the verdict was actually returned, which he did not, it would also be cause for immediate dismissal. Therefore, the discipline is indefinite suspension without salary.

From this tragic incident I appeal to every employee of The Associated Press for the use of the utmost caution hereafter. No one knows better the serious damage that this incident has caused to the organization than do we employees, and no one feels the hurt more than we do. Each employee is entitled to this statement of what happened so that such errors of procedure certainly never again will be repeated. From the earnest resolve that all of us make as a result of what happened in this instance we must take heart to go forward with confidence to the upbuilding of the service and to increasing credit in its good name.

The entire record in the matter will be presented to the Board of Directors for any further action it may decide to take.

TVA Plans Crippled by an Injunction

U. S. Prohibited From Competing With Alabama Power Co.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—(AP)—Preliminary to signing a formal decree, Judge W. I. Grubb in federal court said Friday he would annul in its entirety a contract between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Alabama Power Company for transfer of the utility's transmission lines in north Alabama.

The judge held that since an "interchange" agreement through which TVA had been selling current or whole-sale to municipalities and county organizations was involved in the contract, this would fall with the decree. Under the "interchange" agreement with the Alabama Power Company, current has been delivered to Tupelo, Pontotoc and the Alcorn County Association in Mississippi and to Athens, Ala., and Pulaski, Tenn.

Judge Grubb said he would hold that the TVA was entitled to Wheeler dam, since it was built legally, and "the decree ought to provide against any disturbance of work there."

"It was asked whether 14 municipalities involved in the August 9 contract could obtain FWA loans to build their own systems and buy power from the Alabama Power Company or in generating plants."

Judge Grubb said it was all right so long as it did not "involve TVA engaging in proprietary business, or in competition with the Alabama Power Company."

The injunction was granted by Judge Grubb to the shareholders after David E. Lillenthal, power director of TVA, had advised the towns to proceed with PWA loans to construct their own systems, because litigation had halted efforts to purchase the existing systems.

the Cotter toll bridge.

"It is my understanding that Mr. Bailey stated to you that it is not probable that these gentlemen would be convicted but you suggested that some further investigation be made on some matters that Mr. Bailey had not referred over into my administration, to make the investigations you suggested," Mr. Donham wrote Judge McGeehe.

"I have completed the investigations as far as possible and am doubtful if a conviction could be had on any of the gentlemen charged in this indictment on the testimony we would be able to produce."

"To try the case would cost Pulaski county possibly $2,500 or more and then no doubt would result in acquittal."

"I therefore join Mr. Bailey in the request that these cases be nolle prossed."

Long Not to Ask New Constitution

"Dictator" Unlimbers Artillery for Attack on Former Ally

BATON ROUGE, La.—(AP)—Huey Long's special session of the legislature Friday night advanced his bills to position for final passage Saturday and the senator declared there would be no last-minute "dynamite," Long also declared there "won't be" any constitutional convention.

As Long was supervising senate action on his measures he was asked if any amendments would be introduced just before adjournment. Saturday such as those which added to his "dictatorship" in the special session last December.

"No," Long answered.

Rumors have persisted in political circles in recent months that Long was planning to hold a constitutional convention to rewrite the state's fundamental law to his liking.

Long was asked if he had "any plans for a constitutional convention."

"No," Long said, pausing before adding, "there won't be any."

Long took the floor of the senate Friday night to address it. He was invited to speak in "answer" to an attack made on him a few minutes before by state Senator W. Scott Heywood of Jennings.

Long accused Heywood of "unfaithfulness" in going against him after he (Long) had named him a colonel on the governor's staff and had "elected" him state senator.

"He says he has no political aspirations," Long declared. "Well, I hope he changes his mind and submits himself to the judgment of his people."

"There was a man named Paul Cyr—go see where he is."

Cyr was elected lieutenant governor on Long's ticket when Long was named governor. Cyr subsequently became Long's enemy and when the senator went to Washington to take his seat in the senate Cyr was shut out of office as one of Long's friends put in his place as governor.

Long also denied that he is a "dictator."

"A man is not a dictator when he devotes himself to carrying out the wishes of the people," he said.

Downs the Texas Aggies
45-41 in Thriller at Fayetteville

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark.—In a game in which the score was tied seven times and the result in doubt until the final gun, the University of Arkansas Razorbacks literally "played their hearts out" Friday night to remain in the Southwest Conference race, defeating the Texas Aggies, 45 to 41. The teams will resume their series Saturday night, with the Porkers needing another victory to at least cinch a tie for the championship.

While their injured captain, Taft Moody of Jesup, arose from a hospital bed to cheer his mates from the sidelines, the Porkers rose to even greater heights to play one of the most thrilling games ever witnessed here. So terrific was the play, that four Razorbacks regulars saw the finish from the sidelines while two Texan were banished.

H. L. (Kee) Poole led Arkansas, collecting 16 points, while sub-Captain Fulton found the hoop for nine and Gilliland and Newby each accounted for seven. Tom Hutto was high for the visitors with 17. Davis was next with 11.

Hitler Takes Over the Saar Valley

Surrender by France Is Act of Justice and Peace,
Says German

Copyright Associated Press
SAARBRUECKEN, Saar.—(AP)—Adolf Hitler, amid such storms of cheering as even he has seldom heard—welcomed the Saar back to Germany Friday as 15 years of foreign control of the basin officially terminated.

The day, one of rejoicing for the Saar and all Germany, Hitler termed happy not only for Germany but for all Europe.

"It is quite possible," Hitler told his vast audience, "that by this return the crisis was averted under which two great neighbor nations suffered."

"By this act of equality and justice, the way finally has been cleared for improving our relations with France. Just as we desire peace, so it is hoped our neighbor folk is willing to co-operate in common work for averting the difficulty which threatens to engulf Europe."
